

EDITORIAL PREFACE

Welcome to the inaugural issue of the Macarthur Law Review. The Review was conceived as a collaborative effort between academic staff on the one hand and students enrolled in one of the Faculty's LLB programmes on the other. This partnership between staff and students has worked well and it is hoped that this and subsequent editions of the Review will be well received in the broader legal community.

In an effort to reflect changes, caused by developments in technology, that have occurred in the studying and teaching of law, we have created a Macarthur Law Review Web site at the following location: <http://libweb.macarthur.uws.edu.au/maclr/maclr.htm>. At this site you will find the full text of Justice Sully's article, entitled, "Judicial Independence Under a Charter of Rights: Australian Snapshot - Canadian Camera" and abstracts of all other articles published in this issue. Comments which you may wish to make concerning the Review in general, or the published articles, may be sent through this Web site. It is hoped that in future you will be able to communicate directly with our contributors via this site.

John Gooley and Libby O'Reilly

